DAY 7

MOYENNE

MOYENNE

- Escorted walking tour by a local ranger, duration approximately 1,15 hrs
Zodiac to shore: wet landing
- Landing, conservation and visiting fees are included in our cruise fare

Brendon Grimshaw purchased the island for £10,000 in 1962 and set about making the island habitable. He did this with the help of one other man, Rene Antoine Lafortune. They operated the island as a nature reserve, roam the island, dine at the "Jolly Roger" restaurant and relax on the beach. Grimshaw and his friend planted sixteen thousand trees, built 4.8 kilometers of nature paths, brought and bred giant tortoises, creating an island of incredible beauty now worth 34 million Euros. There were rumors that pirate treasure is buried on the island. Grimshaw made two major digs and found some evidence of man-made hiding places, but no gold or other treasure has been found as of yet.

After 20 years of persistence, Grimshaw and his assistant Lafortune achieved their goal of making Moyenne Island a National Park in its own right, separate to that of the Ste. Anne marine park. Now known as the Moyenne Island National Park, it harbors more species per square foot than any other part of the world.

Grimshaw died in Victoria, Mahe, in July 2012 and is buried on the island.
